

VisWeek Bingo!

Jock Mackinlay bows down to ask a question because he's three times as tall as the microphone stand	You can hear the speaker through the partition in the next room (and s/he's much more interesting)	Somebody has their entire talk written on the slides	Excessive use of animation on slides	Keynote speaker obviously has no idea what conference s/he's speaking at
Somebody makes the thinly veiled suggestion that what was just presented has already been done	Ben Shneiderman asks the first question after a talk	The next speaker in the first row can be seen preparing slides for his/her talk	Session chair has to ask first question, no other questions follow	Panel speakers present only their own work
Red text on blue background	Speaker mentions application of technique "for stock market data and homeland security"	Jock Mackinlay is wearing a Tableau baseball cap	Rainbow colormap	At least three slides in sequence filled with formulas
Speaker keeps turning his head towards screen, away from microphone	"Our future work includes conducting a user study"	Video doesn't play	Somebody bumps into the projector while walking out in the middle of a talk	Penny Rheingans is listening to a talk, knitting
Email notification window keeps popping up on presenter's screen	Somebody asks a question, needs three minutes to get to the point	Hamish Carr corners you and won't let you go before having laid out some completely random but strangely fascinating collection of facts	"Thank you for this interesting talk, however ... "	Speaker points at his/her laptop screen, nobody knows what is being pointed at
Silvia Miksch is wearing something that's orange	Speaker has to skip ten slides because s/he's running out of time	"You can't see that on the projection, but ..."	More than 30 words on one slide	Gordon Kindlmann plays the ukulele or rides his skateboard